Raphael, 1501. Originally an altarpiece from the church of San Domenico Città di Castello, in Raphael's hometown of Urbino, the piece now rests in London's National Gallery. Jesus is shown looking peaceful—though dying. Two angels are catching his blood in chalices. Shown left to right are Mother Mary, St. Jerome, Magdalene, and St. John the Evangelist. The sun and the moon may have been prohibited by the Council of Constantinople as representations of other religions.
